The Conning Tower

SUPPOSE EDGAR LEE MASTERS HAD HAD A HAND IN WRITING MA GOOSE!

We died as we had lived, straggling upward together, letting the desire for attainment gind us to the perils of the task.

Water was needed: We could see the spring Sparkling in the sunlight on the hilltop;

relanteered to go, and Jack, as always, insisted on accompanying Half way up, a stone turned beneath his foot, and he fell,

Plunging to the bottom of the hill, rushing his skull like an eggshell against the rocks.

With anguished heart I threw myself after him, and, hand in hand, we passed through the Gates.

ambition cursed Jill's life, and I, in my love for her, Erred in trying to help her. had been easy to draw water from the hydrant,

But she must have it fresh from the hilltop spring. of course, my first thought was to aid her, and, though she does not h was in trying to save her from falling that I met my death.

Men with ambitious wives, take warning! By that sin fell the angels," and by that sin Shall fall all those who let it conquer them.

BURTON M. CASTNER.

President Wilson's Cleveland speech was only twenty-five minnes long, and he made, in Mr. David Lawrence's opinion, the best appression he has made in a public address since he was inauguated. Now, almost any twenty-five minute speech is better than must any fifty minute speech, and the brevity of the address may tave had a good deal to do with the excellence of the impression.

There may be thoughts so incandescent and ideas so large that bey cannot be expressed in twenty-five minutes, but-aside from schnical exposition-our doubts upon it are sincere. Mental unreparedness is the cause of most verbosity, and, generally, the ere work a man puts on a speech the less he imposes upon his readers and heavers.

Perhaps, if we had wanted to take a lot of time last night, we right have condensed the foregoing two paragraphs into two lines.

A friend of mine named Edith Rawlins Declares you ought to see New Orleans.

Oh I should much admire to view The streets and parks of Dubuque.

The newspaper habit of saying "early to-day" or "yesterday dernoon" in stories whose interest would be heightened by stating exact time has irritated us for years; and city editors have taved away our protests. But the New York papers, unnecesarily inaccurate as many of them are, do better than the Caldwell, J. Progress, which says "There was a fire at the Cedar Grove
